The wonder is indeed as our contemporary observes that any telegrams reach us unmutilated. Our chief object in drawing attention, however, to the statement is to point out the difficulties which telegrams from China to Europe have to encounter, and thus account for some of the mistakes regarding which so much abuse has been lavished on the compilers of telegrams in this Colony. On more than one occasion have we found that the interpolation or omission of a word has completely altered the appearance of a telegram taken from our own Overland summary, thus fathering upon us the blame which should rightfully be bestowed upon either the agents or telegraphic clerke along the route. Wilson and others v. W. H. Reynolds. $249.38, for goods given to defendant for sale on commission.

Plaintiffs (Wilson, Nicholls & Co., of Amoy) sue defendant (who is a ship captain) for recovery of the above sum, being the value of goods given to him by them for sale according to agreement. Defendant was in Amoy in September 1866, and as he was going up North with his ship, an arrangement was entered into, whereby the goods sued on were to be sold by defendant at the prices marked, or more if he could get it, any excess obtained over the marked prices being a perquisite allowed for the sale of the goods; otherwise, the goods to be returned to Amoy, or taken over at the price damed.

Mr Caldwell appeared for the plaintiffs. and Mr Hazeland was for the defendant. Mr F. Brown (partner in plaintiffs' firm) appeared, and gave a clear statement of the acts of the case, and the terms of the agreement entered into with the defendant, prices placed opposite the various articles were less than the selling prices in Amoy, and the agreement was that, if no sale could be effected at Chefoo, the goods should either be returned, or taken over by defendant at the prices named. From September 1866 until the defundant's vessel was lost in September 1867, in the typhcon in Hongkong, the Amoy firm heard nothing whatever of the goods; the plaintiffs were then informed that they had been lost in the vessel, and that defendant did not hold himself responsible for them in any way. No letter was ever received from Chefoo. Defendant, who was once or twice check-ed for the levity he imported into the case, was then examined. He said that he sent a letter from Chefoo about 12th Dec. 1866 to plaintiffs, stating that the prices offered were only about half that at which they had been valued, and that he had therefore not sold them: this was sent in the Kim Joo Hong, which vessel was bound to Amoy. As he never got any answer to this letter, he waited, and took the goods down typhoon of Sept. 1867. In cross-examinathe Kim Hong Tye he had spoken of. REPLY OF HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS. The Duke of Edinburgh has received your address, and experienced much pleasure at the cordial expressions of esteem, and the affectionate words which it contains. Such a greeting as you accorded him can only emanate from feelings of respect towards the laws and institutions which are established alike throughout the British Empire, under the happy rule of the Queen,

The preparations made for his reception here, the decorations and illuminations adding additional beauty to the fine city in which you have found a home, have been viewed by him with great pleasure and much interest. Indeed, during the course of his travels through the numerous possesions of the British Crown no sight more striking and beautiful has come under his observation. His Royal Highness has been gratified also at learning from the authorities of Hongkong, that the numerous Chinese residents here are distinguished no less for their industry than their orderly behaviour, and general respect for the law.

In conclusion, the Duke of Edinburgh offers he heartfelt thanks to the Chinese Community, and desires them to believe that he will ever bear in mind their kindness to him, personally, during his stay in Hongking, and he will always preserve as au agreable memento of his visit to the Colony the remarkable and highly artistic address which has been presented to him

Availing myself of the approach of the time for treaty revision, I urged the point on the Yamen more strongly than ever,

Thus so far as representation abroad, generally speaking, is concerned, the Embassy now in Europe can scarcely be said to have been a spontaneous movement on the part of the Imperial

I style this remark jocular because, for the moment, there was nothing more intended than a pleasantry.

Dr Martin was interpreting on that occasion, and he doubtless remembers what was said, and the manner of saying it. Some days after that, Mr J. McLeavy Brown told Having watched from a distance, to-day me that the Yamen had it in contemplation to appoint Mr Burlingame to be its reprewhat I thought of it. I at once said that the notion ought to be supported, and on the following day I went to the Yamen and spoke very strongly in its favor. At first, the idea was that Mr Burlingame should be invited to go alone, or accompanied only by Mr Brown; and the Yamen did not then appear to think that funds would have to be provided. I suggested that a Chinese Mission ought not to go without Chinese officials, and that Mr Deschamps should be associated with Mr Brown, as secretary of Legation, and arranged for the funds to support the party, fixing the rates of pay etc. (F.) Thus, although the establishment of Missions abroad was a step that spontaneous sending forth of a Chinese had been urged on the Yamen for years, the Embassy. The war of 1860 had resulted in the establishment of diplomatic relations at the capital, which was the only provision of the treaties of Tientsin that the Chinese Government had stremuously resisted. Direct relations with the Imperial authorities had been resisted since the visit of Lord Macartney, in 1793. An opportunity now offered to transfer the scene of future diplomacy beyond the boundaries of the Empire, by depriving the foreign Ministers of all power to redress grievances or enforce the execution of treaties. With civilized governments, bound together by common ties of race, religion and laws, and by facilities of inter-communication, a different interpretation might reasonably be attached to such a movement; but there is nothing in the history of China, since the beginning of foreign intercourse, to warrant the idea that the Imperial rulers had the slightest idea of entering into such relations as those contemplated under the law of nations. What they really wanted was time-time to repeat on a large scale what they had done in the way of preparation to repel foreign intrusion at Canton from 1842 to 1857 1 and at Takoo, from 1858 to 1859; time to establish arsenals, build gunboats, poison the minds of the people throughout the provinces, and in the end, when no longer. able to postpone the execution of treaties. make a final attempt to drive every foreigner out of the country.
